Stock Exchange Operations Checked By Varied Causes

New York, Dec. 31.—Stock Exchange activity was checked by various influences such as the holidays, our strained foreign relations and the general absence of new stimulants. Apparently we have discounted for the immediate present, much of the prosperity based upon a big harvest, easy money and profitable munition contracts. These factors may still remain as elements of support, but new considerations have appeared which require careful weighing. Chief of these is the tremendous expansion of credit, and the mobilization of American securities owned by Great Britain. Both of these situations are of importance and will have to be closely watched. Fortunately our banking situation is sound and strong in spite of an expansion in loans of about a billion dollars within the year. But while our resources show no strain as yet, it behooves us not to move too rapidly in the granting of further credits if we wish to avoid dangerous inflation. This country is already enjoying a very substantial trade revival based mainly upon a rich harvest; and merchants in good position for judgment express confidence in six months' excellent business, but beyond that are cautious in venturing opinions. This mixture of optimism and conservatism can easily be understood, for there are still many problems ahead which both merchants and manufacturers will have to face. Chief of these is the war, the end of which seems weary months away. That calamity violently deranged our foreign trade; the injuries, however, having been more than compensated for by the phenomenal expansion in our export trade. Though losing practically all of our exports to Germany and Austria we have more than made good these losses on shipments of munitions to the allies; especially to the British Empire, which last month absorbed nearly one-half of our exports. Europe will draw upon us heavily for food supplies, irrespective of war or peace, for some time to come; but as to munitions it is very possible that the zenith in the matter of orders has been passed so far as the United States is concerned. Additional contracts will of course be received but from now on their volume may be expected to decline; since the allies are better prepared to supply themselves, and repeat orders going here will have to meet the competition of foreign plants which are turning out explosives and guns at a greatly reduced cost. Henceforth the big profits on munition contracts may have to be sharply cut, and it is fortunate that the early orders were usually accepted upon a basis covering not only liberal profits, but entire cost of plant and machinery. In many cases the latter could be scrapped and the companies left far better off financially than before the war. So if speculation be kept within rational bounds, there is little danger of difficulty from a reduction of this business.

The derangement of our foreign trade, however, imposes one restraint upon speculation which cannot be ignored. We must continue ready to give credit and take back our securities in payment of the surplus merchandise we sell abroad. Great Britain's mobilization of her American securities has rendered such action both safe and easy. By thus marshalling this item of her resources she has tremendously enhanced her credit in the United States and put within her reach the only collateral that we care to accept. One important advantage from this operation is the successful stabilizing of foreign exchange, which removes all doubt as to Great Britain's ability to finance her share of the war and with it the most serious uncertainty facing this market. As an outcome of this operation we must expect a firmer money market should business activity in the United States continue upon the anticipated scale, or should Great Britain apply for further credits in this country, which is probable since that was one of the objects of the financial mobilization referred to. Another effect will be the continued sale of British holdings of American stocks and bonds in this market. During the last month or two these sales have been very heavy and have been a potent factor in offsetting the international trade balance. Immense sums in securities have been returned to this market since the war and more are coming, which shows remarkable investing power on part of the United States. On this account the new domestic flotations have been smaller than would otherwise have been the case. The January investment demand is close at hand and it remains to be seen how far it has been anticipated. The January disbursements are estimated at over $200,000,000 over a year ago. Congress has adjourned over the holidays, and thus far has shown very conservative tendencies. The presidential campaign however, has already begun and more or less excitement is almost inevitable. As a rule no important legislation is attempted in the last year of a presidential term and the effect of such campaigns is usually out of all proportion to the excitement created. The chief issue of this campaign however, promises to be preparedness, on which a hot contest is in prospect. Other issues may also be formulated as a result of the war.

The year closes with trade in generally good condition. There is no abatement of activity in the steel industry and the railroad outlook is better than for several years, not only as to traffic but also as to the attitude of public opinion. The big trunk lines are reporting large earnings both gross and net and their chief problem now is to remove the embargo on traffic caused by the congestion of export freight at the eastern seaports. Our second note to Austria though firm in its demands is pacific in tone and should pave the way for a satisfactory final adjustment. Needless to say a lessening of removal of international friction would have a stimulating influence upon the stock market. The collapse of Villa in Mexico is also a favorable factor, and combines a long threatened disturbance. As a result, an early revival in Mexican enterprises may be looked forward to.

THE MARKETS

Following the New Year's holiday dullness, the market shows but little signs of life today.

The downward price of eggs has been checked by the cold weather and snow. The weather has had a tendency to stiffen the price, but the quotations of last week seem to hold good in Salem.

Veal is stronger, the market men now offering from 10 to 11 cents. Pork on foot is now bringing 5 1/2 cents from the local market men, as well as those who are buying in the country to secure car lot shipments for Portland.
